Fiscal Court controversy Tuesday

A controversy developed at Tuesday's meeting of the Rockcastle Fiscal Court about polygraph testing. The court's chairman, Magistrate Bill Wren, said that the court had been paying $15 a load to be dumped at the county garbage collection service in Mount Vernon. He pointed out that Mr. and Mrs. Bullen had the franchise, and the court would use their income for extra income. He expressed his knowledge of that demand and that the improvements are still being considered, although they agreed that it would not mean the project will be abandoned. The latest word from the county's solid waste disposal program is that it is not under consideration.

Mr. Wren also pointed out that the court had paid $15 a load to be dumped at the county landfill in Mount Vernon. He pointed out that Mr. and Mrs. Bullen had the franchise, and the court would use their income for extra income. He expressed his knowledge of that demand and that the improvements are still being considered, although they agreed that it would not mean the project will be abandoned. The latest word from the county's solid waste disposal program is that it is not under consideration.

Mr. Wren also pointed out that the court had paid $15 a load to be dumped at the county landfill in Mount Vernon. He pointed out that Mr. and Mrs. Bullen had the franchise, and the court would use their income for extra income. He expressed his knowledge of that demand and that the improvements are still being considered, although they agreed that it would not mean the project will be abandoned. The latest word from the county's solid waste disposal program is that it is not under consideration.

Mr. Wren also pointed out that the court had paid $15 a load to be dumped at the county landfill in Mount Vernon. He pointed out that Mr. and Mrs. Bullen had the franchise, and the court would use their income for extra income. He expressed his knowledge of that demand and that the improvements are still being considered, although they agreed that it would not mean the project will be abandoned. The latest word from the county's solid waste disposal program is that it is not under consideration.

Mr. Wren also pointed out that the court had paid $15 a load to be dumped at the county landfill in Mount Vernon. He pointed out that Mr. and Mrs. Bullen had the franchise, and the court would use their income for extra income. He expressed his knowledge of that demand and that the improvements are still being considered, although they agreed that it would not mean the project will be abandoned. The latest word from the county's solid waste disposal program is that it is not under consideration.

Mr. Wren also pointed out that the court had paid $15 a load to be dumped at the county landfill in Mount Vernon. He pointed out that Mr. and Mrs. Bullen had the franchise, and the court would use their income for extra income. He expressed his knowledge of that demand and that the improvements are still being considered, although they agreed that it would not mean the project will be abandoned. The latest word from the county's solid waste disposal program is that it is not under consideration.

Mr. Wren also pointed out that the court had paid $15 a load to be dumped at the county landfill in Mount Vernon. He pointed out that Mr. and Mrs. Bullen had the franchise, and the court would use their income for extra income. He expressed his knowledge of that demand and that the improvements are still being considered, although they agreed that it would not mean the project will be abandoned. The latest word from the county's solid waste disposal program is that it is not under consideration.

Mr. Wren also pointed out that the court had paid $15 a load to be dumped at the county landfill in Mount Vernon. He pointed out that Mr. and Mrs. Bullen had the franchise, and the court would use their income for extra income. He expressed his knowledge of that demand and that the improvements are still being considered, although they agreed that it would not mean the project will be abandoned. The latest word from the county's solid waste disposal program is that it is not under consideration.

Mr. Wren also pointed out that the court had paid $15 a load to be dumped at the county landfill in Mount Vernon. He pointed out that Mr. and Mrs. Bullen had the franchise, and the court would use their income for extra income. He expressed his knowledge of that demand and that the improvements are still being considered, although they agreed that it would not mean the project will be abandoned. The latest word from the county's solid waste disposal program is that it is not under consideration. 