SMALL BANS INVEST TOO LITTLE IN COMMUNITY, REPORTS SA' A pair of Spindleop Research Te-ports have indicated some of Kentuchy's small-town bunks may not be effective-ly meeting their area's financial meeds. The reports suggested as a possible remedy, a change is state law to allow banks to operate across county lines. The two studies, one prepared inter year and one in the current year, went to state banking officials. The more recent report says that Kentucky need ficials.

for business loans to spur the state's economy. The earlier study says many of the small banks have aging management, lack the push of competition and give poorer support for the local community than do larger banks. Of the 265 state banks in Kentuckly in 1969, the report says that 76 per cent had least than 510 million in assets --a level deemed necessary for full efficiency.
