News From Your Rockcastle Co. Library

Tired of high grocery prices? Grow your own food. A good garden can provide a cheap, nutritious supply of vegetables throughout the year. From early spring until late fall most of your vegetables can come straight from the garden, while some may be canned, frozen or otherwise stored at the season's peak to round out the year's supply.

The average adult eats about 1,500 lbs. of food annually. About one-third of this amount should be vegetables in some form. Do you know about all the vegetables that one can grow in the garden? Why not stop in at your public library and ask for books on gardening?

New books at your Rockcastle Co. Public Library include:
The Fourth Year of the Nixon Watch, by John Osborne. A fair-minded, perceptive account of the Nixon administration.
The Good Provider, by Robert C. Alberts. The life history of H. J. Heinz and his 57 varieties.

The Great American Baseball Card Flipping, Trading and Bubble Gum Book, by Brendan C. Boyd. Back to the days when a nickel would buy not only a slab of bubble gum but a Satchel Paige, a Ted Williams, or a ChooChoo Coleman.

The Imperial Presidency, by Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr. A history of presidential power in the U.S.

Moon Stories, by William Wiesner. Three charming folk stories which attempt to answer age old questions about the moon. P-55.

Money and Kids, by Mary Price Lee. A guide to earning, saving and spending money. 6-UP.

Who Is Victoria? by Edith Erwin. A young girl grows up in town and answers a good deal of curiosity about her previous existence. 5-6.

Wild Burro Rescue, by Robert Franklin Leslie. One man's effort to save wild animals from death at the hands of careless hunters. 5-8.

This week, your Bookmobile Librarian will be on vacation. Look in next week's paper for your next schedule.

STORY HOUR

beginning August 3rd at Rockcastle County Public Library from 2 to 3 p.m. All children are welcome. Films will be shown a stories read to the children by Mrs. Phillip Davis, your Librarian.

CONSUMER COMMENTS

Attorney General of Kentucky

DOOR OPENERS...
Congratulations, Mrs. John Doe, you have been selected to receive a special, valuable prize. There are no obligations - no strings attached... we only ask you to allow our company to demonstrate our new product.

Variations of the above sales "pitch" are often used as a "door opener." If the consumer accepts his prize, he invites a company representative to come into his home. The prize may be a small token of trading stamps, discounts or merchandise, usually of little value and conditioned upon picking it up at the seller's place of business.

Because "door openers" have been abused by some companies in the past, consumers should be aware of the pressure-sales tactics often used after the "door is open."

There are several important tips that a consumer should remember if he is notified that he has been chosen as a "winner," conditioned upon a demonstration of a product:

Before inviting a salesman to his home, a consumer should request information about what product is to be demonstrated, who manufactures the product, and what it costs.

If the consumer decides he may wish to purchase such a product, he should compare the price of similar items selling in the area.

If the consumer has questions regarding the company or the manufacturer, he should check with the local Chamber of Commerce, Better Business Bureau, or the local or state consumer protection agency.

While it is always easy to walk out of a store, it's often very difficult to expel a salesman "invited" to a person's home. Also, a single item may look much more appealing in a person's home than when it is surrounded by many other brands and items in a store's sales room.

To contact this office for additional information regarding sales or other consumer protection laws, Kentucky residents may write the Office of the Attorney General, Consumer Protection Division, Room 34, Capitol, Frankfort, Kentucky 40601; or call, toll-free on the consumer hotline, 1-800-372-2960.

Grants for Regional Crime Councils - The Ky. Crime Commission has made available $325,000 to Kentucky's sixteen regional crime councils for the new fiscal year. The crime councils evaluate crimes, crime rates and criminal justice system performance in their areas and make recommendations for upgrading criminal justice agencies. The funds were granted through the federal Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act. The money generally will be used to pay staff salaries, compensation, traveling expenses and council operational costs.

Ford Allocates Surplus Funds - Gov. Wendell H. Ford has announced the allocation of more than $39.2 million in surplus state funds. The surplus was derived from receipts which exceeded budget estimates and from unused budgeted funds. The allocations were made according to priorities established by state law governing surplus funds.

Kentucky Afield

By Hope Carleton
Dept. of Fish and Wildlife

Between fishing trips, Kentucky's sportsmen are beginning to think about fall - and hunting. With the opening of the dove season just a little more than a month away, it's time to start looking for good hunting areas, checking and patterning shotguns and getting both yourself and your dog in shape.

This year's dove season should be as good, if not better, than the '73 season, according to Joe Bruna, director of the Div. of Game Management for the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources. However, Bruna states that it is still too early to tell if there will be vast concentrations of doves on opening day. This will depend on the ripening and harvesting of silage, wheat, millet, soybeans and other grain crops which attract doves.

Dove season will open this year on September 1 and continue through October 31. It will reopen December 1 and run through December 9. The shooting hours for doves are from 12 noon until one-half hour before sunset, prevailing time.

An ardent sportsman, Joe would like to pass on a few tips and suggestions for those who may be new to dove hunting.

First, don't be discouraged if you miss a lot of doves - they are one of the most difficult birds to hit, and even an expert wingshot will usually average less than one dove for every two shells.

Be sure to get permission before hunting on private land. Not to do so is both illegal and also a serious breach of courtesy.

Dove hunters will do better if they wear light weight clothes that blend into the surroundings. White and other light colors are too conspicuous and should be avoided. Also, be sure to mark where a downed bird has fallen, and retrieve each bird before swarming onto another target. This will greatly reduce the number of lost doves, as will the use of a trained dog.

Since early season weather is often pretty hot, be sure to take a supply of drinking water and a water dish for your dog.

For detailed information on the rules and regulations for dove hunting, check with your local conservation officer or write to the Dept. of Fish and Wildlife Resources, Capital Plaza, Frankfort, Ky. 40601.

Frankfort Watchline

We learned the other day, at the same time as the lawmakers who are supposed to help make money decisions, that Governor Wendell Ford is increasing the total of revenue surplus money he's spending this year to about 73 million dollars.

He told the suddenly wide-awake legislators that he doesn't spend it in a hurry, inflation will do terrible things to his buying power. He tried to soothe some ruffled feathers, though, by hanging on to $51 million for later allocation.

That's right. It totals $125 million. In surplus. This year alone.

How, you might ask, could revenue estimates be so far out of line not to anticipate these kinds of dollars? We wondered that, too. So did the members of the joint committee on Appropriations and Revenue.

They were told by the governor's revenue and budget people that the inflationary state of the nation's economy is at fault, that they came up with the best estimates they could. Remember that bizarre time six years ago when Democratic Governor Breathitt announced in the waning hours of his administration that revenue shortages would leave his successor, Republican Louie Nunn, with a 24-million-dollar budget shortage?

Nunn later used the development on which to hang an increase in the state sales tax. We were asking back then, how could revenue estimates be so far out of line on the high side? But we recall the problems Breathitt was having with the state's teachers during the '66 session.

They staged a one-day strike. He gave in and granted them large pay raises and suggested to his revenue folks that estimates be hiked by 24 million dollars. So, the raise was on paper for the teachers to see, but the next year's income did not justify the ballooned estimates.

The teachers' raises, however, were a solid part of the budget, and Nunn inherited a 24-million-dollar headache.

We recalled that to show this: Games have been played before with revenue estimates, and we're not so sure games aren't being played again.

We recognize the problems brought about by the unstable economy. We realize there's no way on earth to pinpoint what the state's income's going to be months hence. But we really wonder if the lawmakers and the people get the benefit of the latest and best information at the state's fingertips.

We don't recommend a change from the sensible practice of making conservative estimates. Time has taught us not to do otherwise. But this is ridiculous.

Nor do we agree that the money should be spent so quickly. True, the first 40 million dollars, or most of it, had already been earmarked in the budget. But this last $33 million is something else again.

Why, we ask, does it make sense to hold millions of dollars in revenue sharing money, some for longer than two years, and earn massive amounts of interest through certificates of deposit and treasury notes, if it doesn't make sense for revenue surpluses.

We're in sympathy with A&R Committee Chairman Joe Clarke's concern about the independence of the Kentucky Legislature when this much money's going to be spent without the advice and consent of the lawmakers.

We are very aware of the spending flexibility the governor enjoys thanks to fresh provisions granted by the last legislature, but we still view the surplus situation as a most effective way to change the constitution where appropriation of funds is concerned.

This is election year. The governor having been able to spend 270 million dollars in capital construction projects across the Commonwealth. None of that can hurt his senatorial aspirations.

Nor can this $33 million dollar icing on the budget cake.

Problems? - Since it's been effectively demonstrated now how much influence revenue estimates have on the state's financial picture, something sinister occurred to us.

The agreement that the Mountain Lawmakers extracted from the governor last session to send back home some of the coal tax surplus could be in trouble. Remember, there's only an excess when actual income exceeds the estimates. Dreams of windfalls for the Mountains in these days of coal's new importance could easily be wiped out by overestimates of the coal tax revenue. Those eastern Kentucky lawmakers better be looking for a more secure deal than they now have.

Come Again? - This actually happened to a colleague the other day here as he called and asked the secretary of a top-level state official if the man was in: "No, he's not," she sweetly replied, "and may I tell him who's calling?"

OPINIONS FROM OFFICE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

Among opinions released this week from the office of Attorney General Ed W. Hancock were the following: Question of Authority - In response to Martin County Judge Ray Fields, the Attorney General's Office said that a county attorney does not have the authority to issue an arrest warrant. Under state law a county attorney has no judicial functions. **

Paid Leave for Jury Duty - In response to Glenn Woolcott of Shelbyville, the Attorney General's Office says that all employees of a public school district are state employees and therefore even non-certified employees such as lunch room workers, bus drivers and custodians are entitled to paid leave for jury duty. *****

95 DROWNINGS RECORDED IN KENTUCKY

FRANKFORT, Ky.-Ninety-five drownings have occurred this year on Kentucky's waters through July 17 according to the Department of Transportation's Division of Water Enforcement.

Water Enforcement Administrator Doug Shoulters believes this figure could be reduced if more boaters and swimmers were aware of what they can do to assist a person in trouble in the water.

In most cases the best course of action is to throw something buoyant into the water to keep the person afloat he said.

"Even a strong swimmer," said Shoulters, "may have trouble saving a drowning person. Often the drowning person is so panicky that he works against the would-be rescuer by not relaxing in the water and allowing himself to be pulled in."

Rescues attempted in this manner sometimes result in two drownings instead of one, he added. "You should swim out to save a drowning person only as a last resort, when there is no other means available."

"You can use anything handy, such as a tackle box, thermos jug, or any wooden object like a deck chair, tree branch, paddle or water ski. Any of these objects will keep a person afloat long enough to enable you to get help to them."

If the person is too weak to reach shore with a buoyant

General Fund Exceeds Estimates - Kentucky's General Fund for the fiscal year ending June 30 exceeded estimates by $23.5 million. Total receipts into the fund reached a new record of $818,906,696. The unanticipated excess resulted from higher receipts from the severance tax and the sales and use taxes. The figures were released by Finance and Administration Commissioner Charles Pryor, Jr.

Energy Conservation Tip

Recipe for your Range - Always remember that you can save energy by using the lowest heat setting that will do the job. Clean surface unit reflector pans also increase efficiency. When you're cooking, cover the saucapans. Foods cook faster, conserving energy and your kitchen stays cooler. Use pans that cover the surface units. You'll avoid wasted heat or a prolonged cooking time. *****

Registration of artists will start at 10 a.m., according to Mrs. Jeryln Rose, president of Powell County Art Club which sponsors the popular event.

Mrs. Rose, editor of the Clay City Times, said that paintings in all media are welcome, "but all work must be properly framed or matted."

The park setting has in the past attracted many extra visitors, the majority of them from northern Kentucky and the Cincinnati area.

"No one will be disappointed this year," states Mrs. Dana Shepherd of North Fork Road, Stanton, vice president of the club, "for more than 500 paintings are expected to be displayed."

The display area is the concrete island, surrounded by a lake formed by Middle Fork of Red River and rimmed by massive shade trees. Several tiers of bleachers seats provide convenient areas for artists to set up their works for viewing.

Due to the increasing number of paintings which are exhibited each year, the club has announced, paintings will be given priority and pieces classified as crafts will

The annual show is not a judged event, but is a showcase for all artists and an opportunity for art lovers to purchase paintings in a wide price range.

The bleacher area on the island will be filled on a first-come basis.

The annual show allows families to participate in many activities. The park area has vast natural plantings of wildflowers, shrubs and trees, numerous hiking trails, old railroad beds, rock cliffs and areas for rock hounds to explore.

The park is accessible via the Natural Bridge and Red River Gorge exit on the Mountain Parkway.

The art show closes at 5 p.m.

is the time to do the work. Benny Pjick, Extension Floriculturist at the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture, recommends carefully digging up the clumps and dividing them. Plant in a well-drained, well-prepared location, setting them so that the rhizomes will be level with the ground surface.

Foxgloves, cantabury bells, and honesty plants should be planted this month for bloom next year. If you haven't at least one honesty plant (Lunararia) somewhere around the place, sow a few seeds. Some call this plant "money tree" and it makes a curious winter decoration.

Climbing roses should be pruned back after blooming to give the new canes a better chance to develop. If you are planning to add some evergreens to the lawn, they can be set out after the middle of the month. Your county extension agent or your local nurseryman will most likely be glad to advise as to which kind or varieties will do best in your vicinity. If the newly-set evergreens seem lifeless at first, don't be in too much of a hurry to remove them. By giving them plenty of water and a light mulch, most likely they will come out even though they appear to be dead. But watch them very closely for red spiders and spray with malathion if they appear.

Late plantings of lettuce, radishes, turnips, beans, collards, and parsnips may be planted in early August for autumn use. Although there is always some risk in planting some vegetables in late summer, it is well worth doing. Tender vegetables in the fall are almost better than the first ones of the season.

Since August is usually a dry month, mulching or watering the garden may be important. TK Extension Vegetable Specialist C. R. Roberts points out. Check the garden often, too, for insect damage and use the control measures recommended by your county extension agent if insects appear. And continue spraying or dusting the tomato plants to control blight.

One of the consolations of August is that we usually do not have to cut the grass as often and that the month's often oppressive heat will be followed by the cool of September, the month with "summer's best of weather and autumn's best of cheer."

In August, do what must be done, but in all other respects, take it easy as possible. Eat cold watermelon, go swimming in the pool, visit the county fair, and enjoy some of the fruits of your labor. Summer is on the wane in dusty August and it will be a long time before it comes again.

The crop is being sold to Cumberland Farm Products of Monticello.

Education Department Receives Surplus Funds

An allocation of more than $336,000 to the state Department of Education will enable the department to establish regional data processing centers and revise accounting methods used by local school districts.

The money is part of more than $3 million in surplus funds Gov. Wendell H. Ford recently allocated.

Most of the money will be spent on revising accounting methods used by school districts. During the next two years, $248,000 will be spent on the project with an additional $83,000 estimated for 1976-77.

The project will involve retaining local school district personnel who deal with accounting, revising the manual that they use, changing financial forms and revising financial records.

"This project is a massive effort that will probably take five years to complete in its entirety," said James M. Melton, assistant superintendent for the department's Bureau of Administration and Finance. "The new system will help us analyze the costs of various services and programs."

"With the new system, we are proposing to do financial accounting through regional computer centers. Among the states, Kentucky is at the forefront in working toward providing educational services on a regional basis."

Also allocated by Gov. Ford to the department was $90,400 for three regional data processing centers to service local school systems.

"We applied for federal funds to establish regional computer centers five years ago, but couldn't get them," Melton said. "Since state funds for this are now available, we will be able to implement our plans. Some of the proposed uses for the facilities include pupil accounting and financial accounting."

County Agent's Notes

By: H. LEE DURHAM

To take some of the sting out of this work, plan to do as much of it as possible in the cool of the early morning and late afternoon. During the heat of the day, find some time to sit in the shade and drink lemonade, eat muskmelons that should ripen this month. Save the seed, though. Wash them in a colander, dry, and store away in bags or boxes. When winter comes, feed them to the birds. Most birds, especially cardinals, checkmates, and titmice, are extremely fond of muskmelon seed.

If iris are to be divided, now away.

Rockcastle Recollections

© John Lair

Last Saturday night I concluded an eight-day engagement as host of Kentucky's Bicentennial tent at the Blue Grass Fair, where I was constantly reminded that I am supposed to get Rockcastle Recollections published in book form, as part of the historical features of the celebration. I am also asked by a good many people from day to day when the book will be available, etc. Many people think I have already taken up too much time on it and perhaps they are right. When I first started working on it I estimated that the publication date would be around the first of July, which has proven to be a mighty poor guess.

Since, as you all know, there are no records for the entire period between 1810 and 1873, it has been an almost hopeless task to get accurate information on earlier events. No two people tell a thing exactly the same way, and it is very difficult to check up and decide just which account gives the real facts. But, at that, the person relating a story just a little bit inaccurately has not been as much of a drawback to the progress of the book as the one who clams up and just doesn't tell us anything at all. The field is too big, and time is too short, for one person to do the whole job of writing a history of Rockcastle County. My job should have been that of editor, rather than author. If the many people in the county who are qualified to do so would do as Logan Bryant did a couple of weeks ago and write an article on the particular field, or subject, with which they are, or have been most closely associated, it would certainly speed up matters greatly. It would have taken me a long time to dig around and find out what Logan already knew about the introduction of the automobile to Rockcastle County -- an event of such importance to our economy and way of life. Mrs. Egbert Norton has kindly given me permission to quote from her husband's really fine thesis on Education in Rockcastle County. I am hoping that Opp Bussell will allow me to quote from his book on Colonel Jim Maret, which, by the way, was among the first books published by a Rockcastle author. I am under the impression that our first author was Rosalind Nesbitt, with her novel, "Virginia Rose," if my memory does not fail me. I remember her visiting my home when I was a small boy in an endeavor to sell a copy to the family. My recollection is that we did not buy one, but I am anxious to remedy that situation now. If anybody, anywhere, has a copy of Miss Nesbitt's "Virginia Rose," I would like to buy or borrow it for use in connection with our forthcoming history. She must have written this book around 1910. Does anyone know of an earlier book written by a Rockcastle Citizen?

Later this week, or early next, I expect to start investigating the details of the publication of Rockcastle Recollections. First I must decide exactly how many pages it will contain, how many pictures, maps or other illustrations will be used, what kind of paper it will be printed on and whether it will be cloth or paperbound. The decision on all these matters will determine the cost of the finished job. After the necessary details are completed, then comes the job of selecting the publisher. This will be the concern which I feel will do the best job at the lowest price, bearing always in mind that it is to be a volume you won't be ashamed to put on your library shelf but will take pride in owning. When all arrangements are made for publication, the job is by no means finished. The entire manuscript will have to be retyped, with all corrections made, on a certain grade of paper, double spaced and correctly punctuated. Another big job for somebody, before it is accepted for publication, is the proper arranging and indexing, a very tedious and exacting job that has to be done by someone who knows what they're doing. Proofreading will be done by the printer, but if the author values the accuracy of his book, he'll want to do it himself a second time to see that no mistakes have been overlooked. All in all, writing a book is about half the job of getting it before the public and it does take time to carry it through all phases of the job.

Then there is the all-important matter of financing. It is the general practice among publishers to pay all expense of printing, advertising and distributing a new book and paying the author a pre-arranged royalty on each copy sold. That's the way my "Songs Lincoln Loved" was handled. I wrote manuscript, sent it in and just forgot all about it until they sent me the first copy. But with a county history, it's an altogether different case. No publisher will spend a lot of money printing and promoting a book which they figure will be of interest to the few people living in, or interested in, a single county. Most of them will do the printing and binding, at a certain cost, but have no interest whatever in promoting and selling the finished book. That is up to the author, who must take all risks and try to break even, which he seldom does, unless he has a sponsor or some contributing agency. All he gets out of it is the satisfaction of feeling that he has done something for his county and got his name in print to perpetuate his memory for years to come. Long after the author is dead and gone, old county histories become very rare and valuable. Since only a few copies are printed, and these soon become worn out or destroyed, they get into the scarce volume class much sooner and skyrocket in price. Many earlier histories of Kentucky counties now sell for from twenty-five to forty dollars per copy, and are hard to find, at that. An outstanding example of this procedure is Collins' History of Kentucky, published at the author's own expense, many years ago. In spite of the fact that it was then, as now, outstanding in its field, he suffered a loss of ten thousand dollars on its publication. Nowadays book collectors and antique dealers gladly pay from one hundred fifty dollars and up for a single copy.

So, when I finally complete the writing of the book to the best of my ability, the colossal task of getting it published and into the hands of its readers looms up. Another thing which may greatly delay the publication date is the scarcity of suitable paper and bookbinder's cloth. I am told that there is a great shortage in each, and that the sooner I get in my order, the better the chance of all delivery to whatever printer I turn over the job of getting out the book.

Present plans are to find out as quickly as possible the publisher to whom the job will be entrusted, and what the cost will be per copy. This will depend largely upon how many copies are printed. I have hopes that as many as five hundred can be sold and am seriously considering sticking out my neck for that many. As soon as the price it will be necessary to sell them for can be determined, I expect to advise readers of this column and ask them to place orders in advance, so I will know how to proceed. Maybe by next week, certainly by the next after that, I may be able to make the announcement.
